

UTSUWA

A collaborative project with Jo Sijen involves a container: an URN.

A collaborative project with Jo Sijen involves a container: an URN.

Hosted by: Ceramic Studio Jo Sijen

Project Information (EN)

UTSUWA/ URN

The Japanese word UTSUWA literally means vessel or container and commonly refers to any kind of cup, plate, dish or pot. This collaborative project with Jo Sijen involves a different kind of container: an URN.

The first sketches and ideas were developed in my studio in Iceland. The plaster models and moulds, as well as a series of the end products, were developed in Jo Sijen studio in Eindhoven. Our project at DDW, including the different steps of making process of the urns, is shown at the studio.

There I also exhibit a small series of drawings and sketches in clay: ideas of unreal and scary creatures from Icelandic folk tales from my childhood memories. Most of my experiments began with sketches on old accounting paper, from a stockroom that was left behind in at the Kirsuberjatréð shop in Reykjavík, a design store which dates back to when the building housed a stationary shop. The small clay sculptures are made in-between different projects and are made of leftover clay. Many of my works reflect on craftsmanship, knowledge, and techniques which function is often unclear.

Projectinformatie (NL)

UTSUWA/ URN

The Japanese word UTSUWA literally means vessel or container and commonly refers to any kind of cup, plate, dish or pot. This collaborative project with Jo Sijen involves a different kind of container: an URN.

The first sketches and ideas were developed in my studio in Iceland. The plaster models and moulds, as well as a series of the end products, were developed in Jo Sijen studio in Eindhoven. Our project at DDW, including the different steps of making process of the urns, is shown at the studio.

There I also exhibit a small series of drawings and sketches in clay: ideas of unreal and scary creatures from Icelandic folk tales from my childhood memories. Most of my experiments began with sketches on old accounting paper, from a stockroom that was left behind in at the Kirsuberjatréð shop in Reykjavík, a design store which dates back to when the building housed a stationary shop. The small clay sculptures are made in-between different projects and are made of leftover clay. Many of my works reflect on craftsmanship, knowledge, and techniques which function is often unclear.

Image List

Filename	Caption	Credit
ksg-6_1759929792.jpg	saltfire urns	Hekla Flókadóttir
ddw_1760118003.jpeg	SKOTTA drawing on porcelain	Kristín Garðarsdóttir

The images above are included in the ZIP under /images.