

The Ancestors

The Ancestors transcend mere illumination; they are a manifestation of artistic collaboration, material exploration, and an ode to timeless narratives

The Ancestors transcend mere illumination; they are a manifestation of artistic collaboration, material exploration, and an ode to timeless narratives

Hosted by: UAU

Project Information (EN)

"Harmonizing Aesthetics and Form: The Ancestors Limited Edition Light Collection"

The Ancestors - A limited edition light collection, each embodying a unique "goddess" look-alike sculpture meant to be viewed from every single angle. The series was put together as a collaborative project with weaver Denise Berekmeri. This meticulously crafted light collection was made over the course of a two-year-old research, in which raw materials such as clay, metal, and wicker were considered to be the main drive of inspiration. It was not only their durability and materiality that has been sought and put into question, but also their way of preserving in time without any additional coating that may help expand their lifetime. Materials that would somehow "age" with time were used in order to create a more natural approach to their raw form even after processing them in various ways. Using old techniques such as clay coiling, multiple cylinder-like shapes were placed on top of one another to create three stand-alone totemic sculptures. Light and rattan weaving play a focal point in these shapes, each reminding of a somehow mythical being of the past, a so-called Ancestor. Thulani - the quiet one, Nightjar - bird of night, and Badru- born on full moon.

Projectinformatie (NL)

"Harmonizing Aesthetics and Form: The Ancestors Limited Edition Light Collection"

The Ancestors - A limited edition light collection, each embodying a unique "goddess" look-alike sculpture meant to be viewed from every single angle. The series was put together as a collaborative project with weaver Denise Berekmeri. This meticulously crafted light collection was made over the course of a two-year-old research, in which raw materials such as clay, metal, and wicker were considered to be the main drive of inspiration. It was not only their durability and materiality that has been sought and put into question, but also their way of preserving in time without any additional coating that may help expand their lifetime. Materials that would somehow "age" with time were used in order to create a more natural approach to their raw form even after processing them in various ways. Using old techniques such as clay coiling, multiple cylinder-like shapes were placed on top of one another to create three stand-alone totemic sculptures. Light and rattan weaving play a focal point in these shapes, each reminding of a somehow mythical being of the past, a so-called Ancestor. Thulani - the quiet one, Nightjar - bird of night, and Badru- born on full moon.

Image List

Filename	Caption	Credit
the-ancestors-2x_1693487503.jpg	Nightjar- the bird of the nocturnal realm	Oscar Ungvari
the-ancestorsx_1693487516.jpg	Badru- born under the full moon's glow	Oscar Ungvari

Filename	Caption	Credit
the-ancestorsxx_1693487538.jpg	Thulani - the contemplative one	Oascar Ungvari

The images above are included in the ZIP under /images.