

Woven Bricks, ode to masonry

Hosted by: Iris Toonen studio

Project Information (EN)

WOVEN BRICKS when glass and textile meet - a meeting between glass and textile Woven Bricks showcases the results of research on the intersection of glass and textile next to the proces where it shows the context. The soft fluidity of textile versus the hardness and transparency of glass, all in one expression. Woven Bricks aims to raise awareness among passersby, stimulating their senses through a diversity of materials and colors. The variation in transparency and reflection creates a vibrant effect and responds to its surroundings. A richness developed from attention and a love of experimentation, where the soul enters. In Iris's studio, the focus isn't immediately on the final product; the discovery of "the new" takes center stage. It's "between your hands" where wonder begins. Years of experience have taught her to trust that the most fascinating moments arise precisely from the unknown. This includes various materials and techniques that create new insights and possibilities that can be applied in public spaces and/or interiors, among other places.
